Arlington High School
YEARBOOK

*Published by the Senior Class
1930*

We, the members of the class of nineteen hundred and thirty, in grateful appreciation of her welcome presence as a visitor to our country and as a token of admiration for her example as an excellent teacher and a true Englishwoman, dedicate this year book respectfully to

Lucy H. Stern

IN ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Realizing that Mr. Gammons, our Principal, has been a most just and kindly guide through these last three years which constitute our High School life, we, the class of thirty, wish to acknowledge our deep gratitude for his patient and judicious guidance. Always we shall be grateful for his quiet, unobtrusive advice, and for his earnest friendship; we cannot leave Arlington High School, without this sincere recognition of his generously given assistance.

CLASS OF 1930

History of the Class of 1930

All the world's a school,
And all the boys and girls are merely scholars.
They have their ups and downs;
And one stude in his time learns many lessons,
His books being three classes. At first the Sophomore
Grovelling, newly escaped his nurse's arms.
Then the Junior
Groaning like camel, with a woeful ballad
To learn for his English teacher. Last class of all
That ends this strange eventful schooling,
Is attended by the Senior, his big and manly voice
Turning at times toward childish treble, full of strange oaths,
Wise saws, and his neighbor's business; seeking
The bubble reputation even in the face of examinations.

Let us hurriedly leave this awful scene of destruction, and, without even apologizing to Shakespeare, turn to the first year in high school of the class of 1930.

Creeping and crawling, with gurgling laughter, tumbled the baby Sophomores to Arlington High School. It seemed a pity to send such small children to a three year term of hard labor, but the little fellows didn't know what they were getting into, so they didn't mind. Of course there were a few who were prematurely cynical; such ones as Dorothy Rivera, John Yale, and Evelyn Muir; elder brothers and sisters who had been through the grind, had poisoned their young minds. Among the infants was one to whom all eyes were turned, even in this early age; to wit, Harold Magnuson. Him his classmates chose president, and on him they laid their cares. From then until the end of his high school career Harold's shoulders were bowed with responsibility, and the wheels in his conscientious head whirled their thoughts in systematic spheres. By June they had developed their vocabularies so they not only said "goo-goo" and "da-da" but also, "five lunch check, please," and "why, Mr. Kapfl, really I was in my home room before the bell rang."

Second year of labor; you might almost think that the chains of bondage would begin to seem irksome, but not so. The sometime gentle Sophomores were transformed. The brazen Juniors blossomed forth in all their splendour. The girls in many colored butterfly skirts; the boys in gaudy socks with ties to match.

YEAR BOOK

This year the first laddie to step into the limelight was Harold Davidson. He played football with the strength of a larger man. Later, during the basketball season, he showed his swiftness of thought and foot in his work on that team. A close second to Davidson in an athletic way was Walter Dorrington. As a hockey player his skates cut the ice with the rest of the team's. He did not limit his efforts to this winter sport, but also tried his hand at baseball.

After several vain attempts the Junior class finally managed to get its members all together to choose class officers. It decided upon the slow tongued, slightly sardonic Richard Baker for President. Richard led his cohorts on through the event of the Junior year, the Prom. The fact that the prom was not a howling success financially didn't bother those who attended the dance. Every one had a good time, and the class later made up the deficit by each one nobly dipping his hand into his almost empty pocket, and drawing forth fifteen cents.

At last the summer vacation came, and the class of 1930 scattered. Each member tried to show a little individuality. It is, however, a bit too much to expect that in two months they could overthrow the habits of ten, so when September came the Juniors ambled docilely into the places of Seniors, and the only difference between this year's Seniors and last year's Juniors is the fact that the girls have discarded the butterfly skirts and three cornered ties in favor of the "New Silhouette." Nor must we forget to mention that room fifteen is no longer general detention room, and that blue slips are things of the past.

The class was a little late in gathering to choose officers; evidently it is not politically minded. When at last they did have a meeting for this purpose, they chose for President John O'Connor, him of the charming smile. They elected Harold Magnuson, Vice-President; Mary Barry, Treasurer; and, last but not least, Betty Hendrick, Secretary. The presidency of the Student Council, a position of no little importance, was filled by Theldon Phinney.

At the very outset of the year Dorothy Markle and Harold Magnuson (how often we see his name!) secured a firm place on the first honor roll and held on tightly throughout the year. Dorothy Markle also made another bid for fame with her conscientious work as literary editor of the Clarion. The hard worked editor-in-chief of this same famous periodical was Richard Guinan.

There were so many eminent athletes this year that it will have to suffice to run over the names of a few of those best known. There was Walter Dorrington of football and hockey fame; Harold Davidson, who played Basketball; Ross Lo-Presti, who led the baseball team; and Theldon Phinney, Captain of the track team.

And now the year draws to a close and the Senior class of 1930 leaves Arlington High School forever. Just another Senior class gone on, and the teachers turn their eyes toward new groups of students.

YOUTH

*The dawn has come,—The far sunrise
Has blazed a message across the skies,—
Oh Youth! Up, up, and on thy way,
You've far to go 'ere close of day.
There are songs to sing, and tasks to be done,
Before you sleep at the set of the sun,—
There are heights to scale, and loves to share,
There are prizes to win, and burdens to bear.*

II

*The dawn has come,—The far sunrise
Has blazed a message across the skies,—
Oh Youth! Up, up, and on thy way,
You've far to go 'ere close of day.
There are vows to keep with a friendly heart,
There's a prayer to uphold in your soul from the start,
There are flowers to plant in a barren sod,
There's a promise you've made with Almighty God.*

III

*Our lessons lend the aiding hand
To castles built and dreams we've planned,
And mates for whom we've learned to care,
Shall leave us mem'ries strong and fair.
There's many a hill to Life's lengthy mile,
There's a future to face with a hopeful smile,
There are friends with whom we're fain to part
But they'll live forever in our heart.*

IV

*Oh High School mem'ries are so dear—
They'll shine the brighter with each year;
Their joys, their gains, their hopes, their fears,
Have given strength for coming years.
So as we tread Life's lengthy mile,
We'll face the future with a smile,
And friends with whom we've had to part
Shall live forever in our heart.*

Student Council

T. PHINNEY, B. HENDRICK, J. BERRY

THE Student Council, representative body of the students, has had another year of proving itself capable of co-operating with the Faculty in governing the school in a business-like and efficient manner.

Theldon Phinney, the President, has proposed many new and constructive ideas which have been welcomed by the Council. Perhaps the most significant of these is the investigation of the Honor Roll system by a committee headed by Jack Berry. The Council, at the time of this writing, is being represented by a committee which meets with representatives of other organizations of the school to discuss aiding the Athletic Association.

The Student Council is made up of members elected from all the home-rooms. Eight are chosen from each senior room, three from each junior room, while sophomore rooms have one representative.

Other officers of the Council are: Jack Berry, Vice-President; Betty Hendrick, Secretary.

Dramatic Club

Row II—W. Bean, J. Parker, E. Knight, H. McCann, J. Yale, R. Blackburn.

Row I—B. Fowler, F. Bezanson, Mrs. Matthews, F. Reed, Miss Johnston, W. Cohen.

THE DRAMATIC CLUB has more than fulfilled our expectations this year. This organization has always lived up to its ideal of presenting the best in dramatic art to the school and the town, and this year the club has worked nobly under the delightful leadership of Mrs. Matthews, and her efficient assistant, Miss Johnston.

In the fall, "The Florist Shop," was presented with much sincerity and charm. At Christmas time, Percival Wilde's "Reverie" was given, first at the annual Dramatic Club Tea, and then for the school. The Public Play for this year will be "The Goose Hangs High," to be given in the town hall. An able and enthusiastic cast has been chosen.

The Hallowe'en party, the annual picnic and banquet, and the spirit of youthful jollity which pervades this merriest of the school's organizations, have made the past year one which we all look back upon.

M. HAERTH, R. MOONEY, G. ANDRES, M. YOUNKIN, DORES HAGER

OUR GIRLS' GLEE CLUB has added to our assemblies this year with its singing under the capable leadership of Miss Pierce.

The officers of the Club are: Dores Hager, President; Rita Mooney, Vice-President; Marie Huerth, Secretary; Marian Younkin, Treasurer.

YEAR BOOK

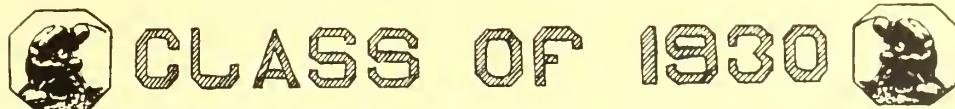

Glee Club

W. RUPERT, G. LANGLEY, F. DINEEN

UNDER the supervision of Miss Pierce, we have developed a new and well-organized student activity—the Boys' Glee Club. This group of students has sung before the school several times, much to everyone's enjoyment.

The officers of the Club are: G. Langley, President; F. Dineen, Vice-President; W. Rupert, Secretary.

Row II—D. Brown, W. Thompson, M. Chambers, R. Guinan, C. Murray, B. Foss, M. Mee.

Row I—D. Markle, E. Atkins.

RICHARD Guinan, although new to this branch of scholastic activity, has led the Clarion through an excellent and praiseworthy year. The Board is to be complimented on the quality of the material of the school paper. The high standard set by the members has been faithfully adhered to all year. Not a little of this success, however, has been due to the capable and friendly direction of Miss Treat and Miss Crastin.

Girl's Club

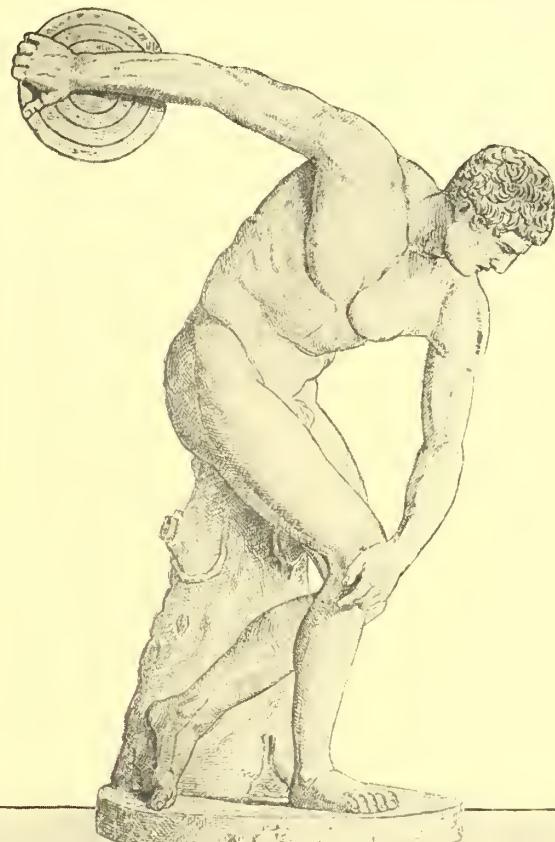

B. FOSS, C. CALLISTER, D. BROWN, E. WYMAN, MRS. MOFFATT

ALL girls who have belonged to this happy organization have enjoyed a singularly delightful year under the leadership of its officers. Elsbeth Wyman is the President and Constance Callister is the Vice-President. The posts of secretary and treasurer have been filled by Darrell Brown and Barbara Foss. Many enjoyable and instructive meetings have been attended, at which there have spoken such people as Miss Stern, our teacher from England, Miss Devi from India, and several other interesting speakers, all of whom charmed the members with their inspiring addresses.

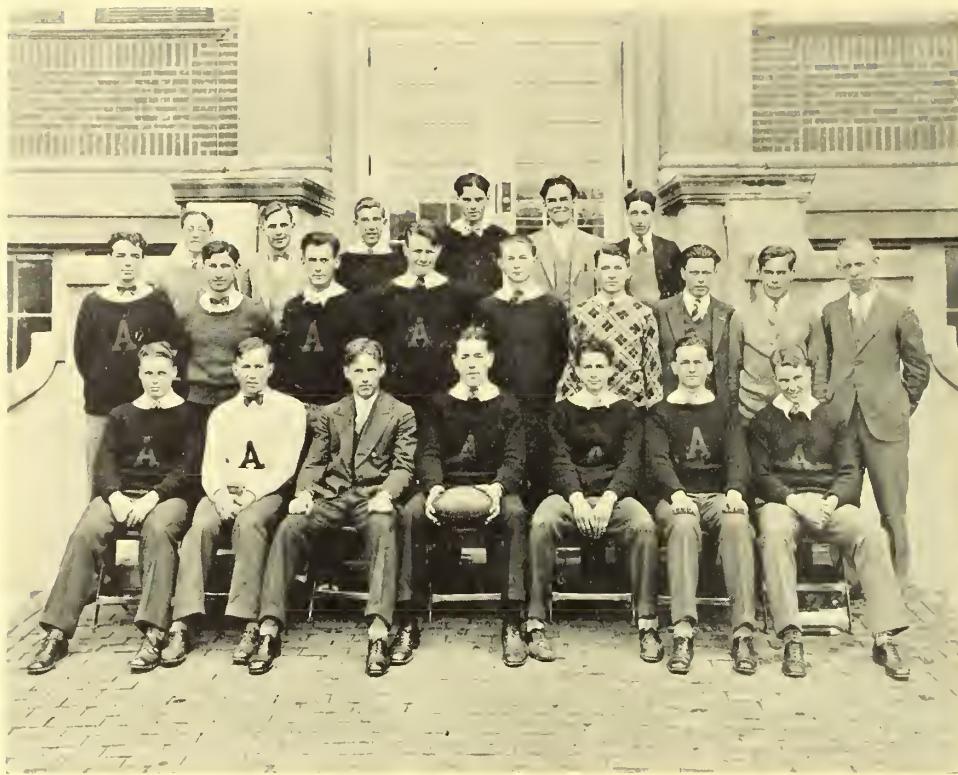

A friendly spirit pervades this large and well-organized club which owes its charm in no small part to Mrs. Moffatt, the Family Advisor. The social side of the club is one of its largest attractions. This winter, many of the girls in the club went to see Victor Herbert's "Fortune Teller," and added another merry afternoon to the many already enjoyed by the members.

The football year was a very successful one when we consider that the team had only three veterans. But even with this inexperienced team, the record was two wins, two ties, and four losses, which isn't as bad as it might be. Coach Downes did remarkably well with the material he had, and he has made a team that shows great promise for the next two years. And, after all, Arlington finished third in the Mystic Valley League.

Cross Country
